NEW DEPARTMENT MERGER PLAN TO HIT DRY BUREAU

Treasury Officials May Lose Control of Prohibition Enforcement Under Re-allocation.

By International News Service.
President Harding's strong endorsement of the government reorganization plan to combine and centralize various bureaus doing the same work is expected to hasten the merger of the many special bureaus of "special agents" engaged in crime detection or investigative work throughout the government service. The "dry" was dealt an unexpected blow, and the President's stand on the question may mean the end of the program to keep the "dry" enforcement agency within the control of the Treasury department. Prohibitionists are making a hard drive to keep the present enforcement organization running as it is now constructed. But as most of the work in this bureau relates to detection of law violators, those in charge of reorganizing government activities contend it properly belongs in the Department of Justice. Attorney General Daugherty has further delayed reorganization of the bureau of investigation of the Department of Justice until the whole matter is settled. It is his view that millions of dollars would be saved by the plan, and greater efficiency obtained. Merger of the various branches would affect those branches of the crime detection agencies: The United States Secret Service and prohibition enforcement in the Treasury Department; inspection service of the Postoffice Department; pure foods and drugs division of the Department of Agriculture, and the bureau of naturalization in the Department of Labor.

Smart Paris Frocks

An adaptation of the redingote has been used to good effect this season, the skirt having the slight bouyancy that many of the late models feature. An afternoon gown of opal green crepe de chine, figured in beige, opens over a slip of plain opal crepe de chine, its pleated skirt extending somewhat below the over garment. The three-piece cape tailleur is simply sweeping everything before it in Paris. The model of the exceedingly new canard blue silk jersey, substitutes for a coat a medium length, high-collared circular cape, handsomely lined in canard blue silk, with rose-mauve figures.

WAR VET ADMITS HE GOT $95 FOR WRECKING HOUSE

Disabled Yank Saw "Chance at Easy Money" in Italian Feud Blast.

PATERSON, N. J., June 14.—Frank Conway, disabled war veteran of Fairlawn, N. J., told Judge William Watson and a jury in quarter sessions court at Paterson yesterday that he had accepted $95 to blow up a house with a dynamite bomb because it was "just a chance to make some easy 'jack' and at the same time help a fellow out."

Conway was the principal witness for the State in the trial of Ruggiero Meola, his son, James Meola, and Earl McKay, all of Paterson, charged with conspiracy to blow up the home of Mariano de Grado, a silk dyer of Paterson. They were arrested, it was asserted, while they were making the bombs after Conway had "tipped off" the police.

"They gave me $95 for the job of blowing up the joint," Conway testified. "If anybody got hurt they promised me $100, and if anybody got killed they said we would get $200 and maybe more."

He said that on April 11 Ruggiero Meola asked him to do the job "because he wanted to get even with the De Grado family on account of one of De Grado's sons having trouble with Meola's daughter." He testified that he had accompanied the elder Meola to Fairlawn, where they stole fifty sticks of dynamite from a power house. McKay was called in, he said, and with James Meola helped to make the bombs. Conway said he gave $50 to McKay and kept $45.

Ruggiero Meola testified that he and his son James had not been on speaking terms for more than a year, and that a conspiracy between his son and himself would have been impossible.
